

This report explains how a small team built a machine learning workflow for customer support. The project started with gathering support tickets, cleaning the text data, and labeling issues. The team used a simple document classifier to route cases faster and reduce response time. The final outcome was a more efficient support pipeline and better operational visibility.